

TWU THEATRE NEWS

ALUMNI NEWSLETTER, NOVEMBER 2018

From the desk of program director Dr. Patrick Bynane

It's hard to believe that we are a mere five weeks away from completing our fall semester. It seems we have packed a semester's worth of work into the first 10 weeks of our semester. Yet in our final month and half we still much to do and see. Next week we open Mother Courage by Bertolt Brecht. This is an exciting project featuring one of our very talented graduate students in the title role as part of her professional paper. It is doubly exciting because this marks the first production of Brecht we have done at TWU Theatre in many years. It is fun and exciting to see us taking on this challenge. While opening our production of Mother Courage we will also be making our big recruiting tour around the D/FW area. If any of you will be at the North Texas Drama Auditions at Collin College or at the Texas Thespians Festival in Grapevine, look us up. We will be auditioning and flying the TWU banner at our exhibition tables. Finally, we are getting ready to audition for the first of our spring productions; Emilie: Le Marquise Du Chatelet Defends Her Life Tonight. This is a wonderful play by Lauren Gunderson: the most produced playwright in United States and one many have still not heard of. I hope we see you at the Redbud soon to check out the great work that is happening here or just to drop in and let us know what you are up to.

Alumni spotlight: Natalie Beech

Natalie Beech transferred into the TWU Theatre program in Fall 2013 from Tarrant County College Northwest. She graduated in Fall 2015 with her Bachelor of Arts in Drama.

She is now working in Out Of Home Advertising as an Account Executive and living in Manhattan (specifically Washington Heights), doing standup comedy at open mics, and will be starting sketch writing classes at Upright Citizens Brigade in the spring of 2019! Her longtime goal is to write and act for comedic and sketch television, with her sights set on SNL.
