

Policy governing children in TWU Libraries

The Texas Woman's University Libraries seek to provide safe, comfortable environments that are conducive to research and study. Children under age 15 are allowed in the libraries if they are attended by a parent or caregiver 18 years of age or older who assumes responsibility for the child. Library staff is not responsible for children left unattended by parents.

TWU libraries are research facilities and do not use filtering software. Access to, or use of, the Internet by minor children is solely the responsibility of the parent or legal guardian.

Enforcement

If library staff cannot locate a parent or guardian in the building or if the child is disruptive, staff has the authority to notify the University's Department of Public Safety. Leaving unattended children in the building is a violation of the Student Code of Conduct and subject to the Code of Conduct Review Process.
